The Merchant's Estates of Rome.

Le Clot is a small town in the south of France, containing 10,000 inhabitants, and is almost a family of workmen employed in the shipbuilding yard and the engineering establishment of the company, called Le Clot, Manufactures. What will be done with their exhibits, and what teaching it provides for its people is in many ways worthy of our consideration.

The company is the proprietor of a large fleet of Mediterranean steamers. Much of the Mediterranean steamship trade used to be carried in English steamers, with English engines and English crews. The English steamers were built at Le Clot. It is not more than fifteen years since that company obtained possession of Le Clot, and made contracts for the building of a number of ships, which were to be built at Le Clot.
